GEEK DESIGNS NEW LATEX PACKAGE

By MATTHEW ALLEN

The package is basically a redefinition of the `\maketitle` command. The model was the New York Times—hopefully I haven't violated any copyright laws. I also had to redefine the plain pagestyle. It kept me busy for a few nights after work. The rest is packages other people have written.

The `multicol` package allows using multiple columns without starting a new page. Using floats is not possible in a columns environment, however with the `picinpar` package, I can set a picture inside a block of text—just like you one you see here. Isn't LATEX cool? And now we're just filling more space, and yet more space.

Another Headline

This is just an example to fill up some space, but as long as I have your attention, I'll give some newspaper advice.

I suppose we could also show how an equation is type set:

$$x = \frac{-b \pm \sqrt{b^2 - 4ac}}{2a}$$

and there you have it.
